FOREWORD

(Matthew Baird, Director of Training, Comments Concerning the New School of International Communism and the USSR)

Dating back almost to the time I was appointed Director of Training in January 1951, I have been convinced that the most important educational job to be done for all levels of CIA employees is to make them aware of the true nature of International Communism as a key instrument in Soviet foreign policy. A realistic awareness of the meaning of Communism ought to be a basic part of the motivation of all career employees. Additionally, adequate knowledge and trained judgment of Communist theory, organization, and tactics appear to be essential elements in the equipment of all United States intelligence officers.

Thus far, our effort has been a meager one in relation to the magnitude of the problem: a half-day orientation for all incoming clerical personnel; a one-week orientation on Communism and the USSR in the Basic Orientation course; the World Communism course of four weeks; and the three-week course on Anti-Communist Operations designed specifically for DD/P personnel.

Other United States agencies, as well as components of CIA, have shown an appreciation of the quality of the limited coverage which we are providing presently in this important area. USIA, for instance, regularly sends two senior officials to the World Communism course. But the fact remains that we have made only a beginning in providing instruction in the field of Communism. There are two reasons why this is so. We had to give priority to urgent operational training, and, until now, I have not been able to find a man with the ability and knowledge to pull together the bits and pieces of instruction into a consistent program and to coordinate the efforts of the OTR instructors who have competence in this field.

After a careful study, balancing the OTR assets in this field against the evident need, I proposed that there be established within OTR a School of International Communism and the USSR (SIC/OTR), and this recommendation was approved. Last month's OTR Bulletin carried a brief item in the "Training News" section concerning the SIC. The Chief of the new school is Mr. Harry Rositzke, formerly Chief of the Operations School. He has been serving with OTR on rotational assignment from the DD/P. He will devote his entire time to guiding the SIC until June 1957 when he returns to DD/P. I plan to replace him at that time with another recognized authority on Communism and the USSR, either from within or outside CIA.

The School will concern itself primarily with the broadening and intensification of instruction within CIA. The following planned changes may be cited: (a) the extension, from one to two weeks, of the Communism-USSR orientation for all professional CIA personnel in the Basic Orientation course; (b) provision of a one-day orientation for all clerical personnel; (c) substantial revision of the World Communism and Anti-Communist Operations courses; (d) preparation of a Communist strategy and tactics course specifically tailored for analysts in DD/I.

In addition, the School will, as directed, provide instruction in this field required by other agencies of the Government. We are already assisting both USIA and the Foreign Service Institute in their Communist instruction. The most recent instance of the growing recognition outside CIA of the need for more adequate indoctrination and training for United States government personnel has been the proposal initiated at the last meeting of the Inter-agency Committee on Training, that all government employees going overseas should be given a common course of instruction in International Communism. I do not see this service to other agencies as a one-way street, however. As the School gains stature, it will benefit from reciprocal assistance, both personal and substantive.

It is intended that the new School will work closely with other units in the Agency concerned with Communism. It will, I believe, develop over the next several years into an increasingly professional and authoritative central point for the provision of instruction concerning Communism and the USSR.

MATTHEW BAIRD
Director of Training

NEW COURSE SCHEDULED BY SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL COMMUNISM & THE USSR

World Communism, course I-2, is no longer offered as such. Courses scheduled from 4 September 1956, through 12 July 1957 (numbers 16 to 21), are cancelled. I-2 content continues in new courses.

A new course, Party Organization and Operations, which represents an expansion of the party organization and operations sections of the former World Communism, will begin 1 October 1956, and will be conducted half-time daily, 0830 - 1230, for a four week period. This course will be listed on the next long-term schedule in your OTR Catalog of Courses; in the meantime, watch the "Registrar's Reminders" for subsequent schedulings of Party Organization and Operations.

IPM CHANGES IN CONTENT, EMPHASIS, RE-TITLED INTELLIGENCE TECHNIQUES

Intelligence Principles and Methods, course I-1, in your OTR Catalog of Courses, is now re-titled Intelligence Techniques and extensively revised in content and objectives. Four weeks in length, it is tailored to the requirements of Junior Officer Trainees and other newly employed professional-level "generalists". It will be given three or four times a year, depending on need. The first class began 30 July, and the next is scheduled for 1 October.

Intelligence officers enrolled in this course will be trained in the use of intelligence techniques applicable to collection, research, or presentation activities. These techniques are used by intelligence officers whether engaged in covert or overt activities. The revised course retains a number of projects included in the former IPM, but there are several changes. The Reading Analysis Program has been displaced, as have most lectures by outside speakers. Emphasis on "learning by doing" is increased, with special attention to clear, concise, and accurate presentation of the final product - whether a report from the field or a piece of finished intelligence.

"INTELLIGENCE" has a STORY

(By  Chief, Orientation and Briefing, Intelligence School, Office of Training)

Though one of the best guarantees of protection of intelligence planning or operations is a rigid code of silence, the Director and Deputy Director of Central Intelligence endorse the concept that in the substantive area of intelligence, much benefit can be achieved by telling the story that the strength of national policy is affected directly by the quantity and quality of intelligence upon which it is based. Speaking in this fashion about an activity that is very prone to say little about itself, viz, intelligence, can bring about the twofold result of:

confidence in what we do, and interest in aiding our effort.

Such confidence in our goals and activities should exist in the American citizenry and in their elected representatives. Interest might come from the field of business or professions or, more tangibly, from the area of academic endeavors where professors could stimulate healthy interest in their students to follow intelligence as a lifetime career.

In our efforts to win friends throughout the intelligence community and influence those with whom we deal in the Federal intelligence system of the United States, certain programs have won their spurs.

THE INTRODUCTION PROGRAM

Everybody entering the Central Intelligence Agency (with very few exceptions) is required under Agency regulation to attend this program. Because many join our ranks who have been with other intelligence agencies and many enter who have had no intelligence experience, each one of these audiences offers the challenge of presenting ideas which interest and benefit the newcomers and at the same time are not boring to the more experienced. In the program, an effort is made to answer the fundamental questions of the what, the why, and the where of intelligence - stressing the substantive side. With this basis, a description is given of the relationships of intelligence organizations in the IAC community and their total connection with the policy level of Government, represented by the National Security Council. The program concludes with a presentation of the internal organization of CIA, explaining each segment of Agency function as it pertains to administration, substance, or operation.

CIA REVIEW

Approximately a year ago, the Deputy Director of Central Intelligence became impressed by the lack of knowledge possessed by many of our people abroad regarding happenings at Headquarters. To him, therefore, goes the credit for initiating a program now conducted regularly for those who return to Washington from overseas posts. In the CIA Review is given a synopsis of significant developments and changes at Headquarters in the last two years. To keep this program current, key officials like the DDCI, the IG, Deputy Directors and Assistant Directors are asked from time to time what, in their estimation, are the outstanding recent developments or trends in the Agency. These views are then combined into a unified presentation which is normally followed by a discussion period.

DEPENDENTS' BRIEFING

This program is presented to wives and adult members of the families of persons going overseas on Agency assignments. The goal of the Dependents' Briefing is twofold:

first, to give the wives and adult family members sufficient knowledge of what is involved in living the life of "cover" so that they will have a better appreciation of the tasks confronting the husbands and, in this way, be more sympathetic with the unpredictable occurrences and unavoidable disappointments in normal family arrangements. Also involved in this first aim of the program is the element of better security which comes by such preparation for life abroad.

second, to give those going overseas a better basis of understanding on which to approach their assignments and derive pleasure and profit from them.

This program is conducted on a broad basis, explaining for the dependents the place of national intelligence in our government; telling them of the security implications of life abroad; analyzing the meaning of "cover"; giving the dependents some tangible views on Western World aims; describing for them the kind of life that they should expect overseas; and then advising them concerning their conduct abroad. Key Agency officials have made themselves available each month to make presentations at this program, which always is climaxed by an individual presenting for the DCI a "Bon Voyage" statement.

DEPARTMENTAL BRIEFING

Until approximately a year ago, each one of the IAC agencies was invited to send representatives to our Introduction Programs. At that time, the Director of Training felt that better results would be obtained if a program were tailored to meet the particular interests of the agencies and allow them to increase their quotas for attendance. At the present time, besides those who come from Army, Navy, Air, and State, key persons are sent here also from the United States Information Agency and the National Security Agency. In explaining the process of intelligence for this group, the stress is placed upon what we have learned about the team concept of intelligence work, i.e., our dependence upon the Departments and Agencies for the support they render in areas of collection and interpretation, and our responsibilities to provide services of common concern for them. Throughout the program, flashbacks are used to show how weaknesses of yesterday have been replaced by the stronger procedures of today.

At the end of the calendar year, the total number going through these four programs is considerable. When "the story is told," these employees, relatives of employees, and persons of other departments and agencies get impressions which remain with them into the future. We hope, therefore, that those who continue as career employees, that those who leave our ranks and mingle again with others in the outside world, and that those from other agencies of Government who know only about us what we tell them in one of these programs, all will retain impressions which will aid the intelligence mission.
